

The most successful flight simulator company in the world now has a new name.

Rediffusion Simulation.

That's right, Rediffusion Simulation.

But, for those of you who recognise an advanced technology Redifon flight simulator, allow us to clear up any misunderstanding.

You see, for 30 years as Redifon Simulation we've been a motive force in the international flight simulator business.

In 1950 we built Europe's first fully electronic flight simulator. And ever since we've been advancing training technology not just in aviation but, through our Systems Simulation Division, in a wide range of other industries.

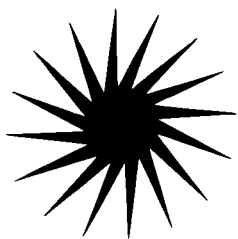

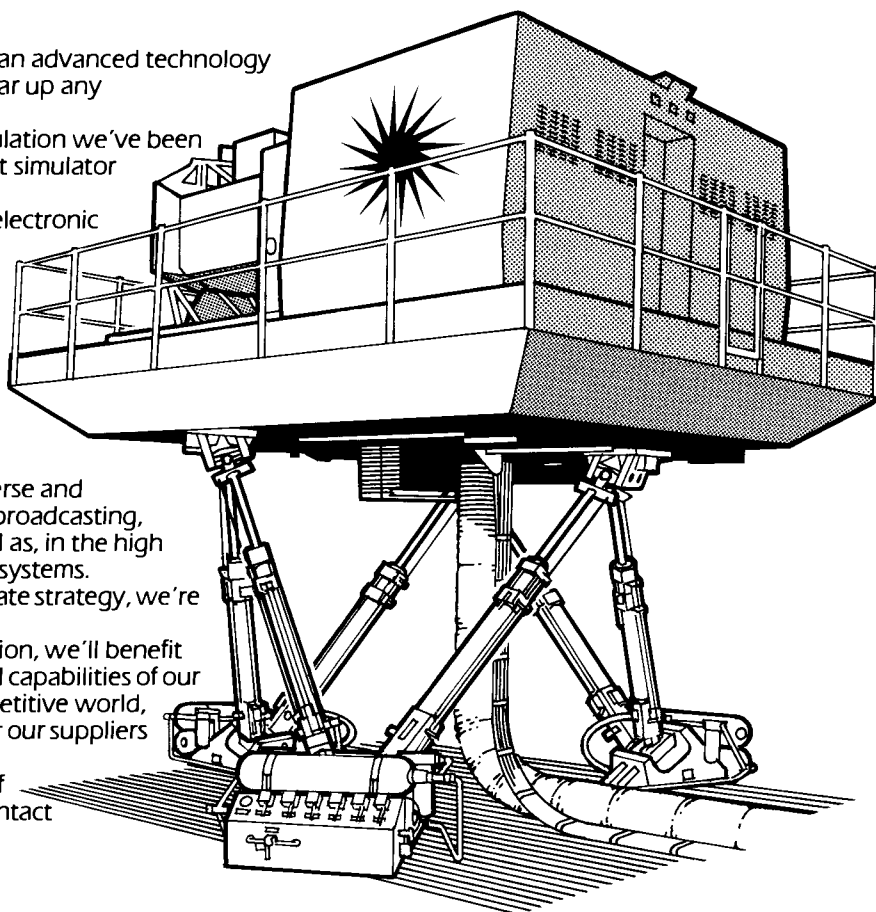

Yet, proud as we are of our achievements, we owe a great deal to the support and stability of our parent company, Rediffusion.

Rediffusion's interests today are diverse and international. They span radio and TV broadcasting, consumer electronics and music as well as, in the high technology area, computers and radio systems.

That's why, as part of a broad corporate strategy, we're changing our name.

From now on, as Rediffusion Simulation, we'll benefit from a close association with the overall capabilities of our parent company. And, in today's competitive world, that's good for our employees, good for our suppliers and, above all, good for our customers.
